DETAILS

Hood College alumnus Taurean Washington '11 will exhibit his work in an upcoming show called "The Re-Education of Taurean Washington."

Washington's work is an eclectic mix of modern and contemporary art. As a fan of hip-hop music, he taps into the art of "sampling," in which lyrics from different songs are referenced directly or indirectly in each piece. Audio instrumentals are also used as a backdrop to provide a soundtrack for the viewer to follow. He has coined the phrase "Art-Hop," which describes his hip-hop inspired art.

Born 1985 in Fort Worth, Texas, Washington earned his bachelor's degree in studio art from Hood College in 2011. Prominent African-American artists such as Jean Michel Basquiat, Robert Colescott and Kerry James Marshall are role models for him.

TAG/The Artists Gallery

Rhonda J. Smith

In December, printmaker, artist, and educator Rhonda J. Smith is exhibiting a series of linoleum and intaglio prints based on Mexican and West African traditions that involve the use of small talisman like objects. This series of talismans are printed amulets and milagro's for safe journeys. In Mexico the milagro (which means miracle) is a small metal charm that might be carried for protection, healing or good luck.

The Gallery will also be showing more than the usual amount of artwork, featuring all TAG members, full and associate, in "Celebrate!". The show will be "cash & carry" to ensure that purchased pieces will be available for giving during the Holidays.

These exhibitions runs from December 6th-29th. Artist talks will be Saturday Dec. 7 at 5 pm and Saturday Dec. 14 at 2 pm.

TOPICS of DISCOURSE

Artist Statement

Discourse refers to how we think and communicate. The verbal and visual connections we have with people, things, and society as well as the relationships within and between all three. By virtue of giving structure to language and thought, discourse provides order in our lives and relationships. Typically it emerges out of social institutions and shapes our behavior, beliefs, values, and identities. In Linguistics, discourse refers to a unit of language and its social usage. By studying the use of verbal (spoken or written) and visual language in a social context, we see how larger units of language-including semantics, syntax and context-apply layered meaning to conversations.

Often, meaning cannot be extrapolated from a verbal exchange alone because of the many semantic factors involved; however, visual discourse begins with a shared visual language. Graphic signage, advertising, corporate identity, and logos are all examples of this shared visual/verbal language. In this solo exhibition, I am drawn to the diverse semantic dialogues that take place between the images, the viewer, and the artist. This dialogue is succinctly specific to the individual. He/She brings to the conversation their own unique story, context, and experience, in turn giving the work specific and unique meaning wholly separate from any intended meaning given by the creator or others. The interaction and communication of images and elements within the work creates even another form of discourse that may invoke a completely independent meaning.
