Brooke Adams Brings Original Play, "Delusion by Proxy" to Sky Stage

FAC & friends were delighted to welcome playwright and actress Brooke Adams to Sky Stage to present a staged reading of her original play, "Delusion by Proxy." The event was presented in conjunction with the Endangered Species (Theatre) Project. The play, set in the near future, is an incisive dark comedy about love and tyranny.

Phase Change, Act III Opens at FAC Gallery

Act III of Thomas Faison's Phase Change is now open at the FAC Gallery at 11 W. Patrick Street. This is the final stage of Faison's yearlong installation, which has moved from "water" (Act I) to "steam" (Act II) and now "ice" (Act III). Act III explores what happens after natural disaster and transformation, and how creative freedom allows us to chart a path forward.

Encouraging Maryland writers, poets, playwrights, and authors to write

Notable Maryland Author

Maryland Author: Matthew A. Henson

Genre: Personal Adventure

"I was in the lead that had overshot the mark a couple of miles. We went back then and I could see that my footprints were the first at the spot"
Matthew A. Henson

Matthew Alexander Henson, (August 8, 1866 - March 9, 1955) was born on a farm in Nanjemoy, Maryland, moved to Washington, DC, became a ship's cabin boy at 12, and traveled to ports in China, Japan, Africa, and the Russian Arctic. The ship's captain took Henson under his wing and taught him to read and write. At age 25, Henson met Robert Peary and spent the next 16 years of his life with Peary on 7 Arctic expeditions learning how to reach the North Pole. On April 6, 1909, during their 8th expedition, they reached and conquered the North Pole. In that moment, Matthew Henson became the greatest Negro explorer of all time.

In 1912, Matthew Henson published his memoir, A Negro Explorer at the North Pole. In it, he described himself as a "general assistant, skilled craftsman, interpreter (he had learned an Inuit language), and laborer." In 1937, he was the first African American to be made a life member of The Explorers Club. In 1944, Henson was awarded the Peary Polar Expedition Medal and he was received at the White House by Presidents Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower. In 1947, he collaborated with author Bradley Robinson on a biography, Dark Companion, which told more about his life. In 1988, he and his wife were re-interred at Arlington National Cemetery and in 2000, the National Geographic Society posthumously awarded Henson the Hubbard Medal.

Genre: Personal Adventure – Personal Adventure is autobiography dedicated to describing the process involved, work required, and obstacles overcome to accomplish a specific extraordinary goal, usually involving overcoming the power and strength of the natural world.

Partial reading list: A Negro Explorer at the North Pole, Dark Companion

Writers Prompt - Fun With Words - Maryland Writers' Association (MWA) invites you to have fun writing Personal Adventure. Using just 100 words, write a Personal Adventure account where your character accomplishes a significant goal in a harsh environment (water, land, air, space) after overcoming harsh obstacles. Jason Mills GREY MATTER (top image): The Grey Matter series was created as a reaction to the polarization of our society. It seems that we are living in a world of extremes, or maybe we always have and I'm just starting to awaken. This series is really me as an artist trying to start or have the conversation of how to possibly remedy this situation. Do I have the answers?... NO, but I do feel that if we can reprogram our brains to look for commonality instead of differences we could possibly make steps into a new direction. This is my attempt at a transformation from polarizing forces of light and dark to a grey area of commonality. I know, Grey is not very exciting but what if we could make that grey area more dynamic and exciting than the extremes.

From this I looked into Grey Matter in the brain and found out there are also pinks and yellows in the tissue. This is why you only see Black, White, Grey, Pink and Yellow with the occasional Purple dot. My goal is not to rid the surface of opposition because they play an important role but making sure that is not all there is.

Any kind of transformation is a little rough in the first stages but as we acclimate the hard edges start to soften. Or at least that's what I'm striving for.

Lisa Sheirer's "The Big Woo" (bottom image "The Big Woo #1): is a new series based upon the mysteries of nature. Is the still life really still or it merely dormant? Maybe the still life is transitioning into a new life form? Does decay emit the same level of energy as the new life? Woo? Science? Both?

These large works (144" x 60" max) each examine the meditative, but active space surrounding recognizable floral living beings. The energy lined color fields are also filled with life. By increasing the size of the wilted flower, making it human scale, the viewer is forced into the flower's life space.

The process begins with photography or scanning of a flower. The photograph (bitmap) is then vectorized to become organic shapes of color, as opposed to square pixels. The organic shapes can then be changed, filled with color, and these shapes can also become lines. The lines of these shapes have been repeated and colorized to represent energy.
