Maryland State Arts Council Announces $40 Million in Arts Relief Funding

The MSAC announced this week that the State's 2022 supplemental budget includes an additional $40 million in Arts Relief funding allocated to MSAC to support arts grants!

The Council and Secretary of Commerce, Mike Gill, approved a plan to distribute Arts Relief funding across Maryland's arts sector with the aim of providing economic stability as we continue to navigate the effects of the COVID pandemic. The plan includes a mix of additional general operating support for organizations with expanded allowable uses, additional project funding to be distributed through MSAC's existing grant programs, and funds to pilot a new grant program that will support working and living expenses of Maryland artists.

This Arts Relief funding comes on top of record funding for MSAC of $28.9 million, for a total of $68.9 million in State support for the arts in Fiscal Year 2023!

Stay tuned for more information and grant deadlines as details become available.

Author/songwriter Finds the Humor in Everyday Life

Author: Barry Louis Polisar

Genre: Singer-Songwriter

"Books and literature really did change my life." – Barry Louis Polisar

Barry Louis Polisar is an author, songwriter, poet, and story-teller for children who also writes songs and books for adults. Barry was born in Brooklyn, New York and his family moved to Maryland, near Washington, DC., when he was eight. That's also when he wrote his first story called, The Ten O'Clock Alarm Clock that Would Not Stop.

Barry knew he liked to read and to write, but went to college to be a teacher. While at college, a school invited him to play some of the songs he had written and the kids were rolling in the aisles with laughter. Then a teacher yelled at them for "acting like children." From this experience, he wrote a song about a mean teacher and began to get invites to sing at other schools. Barry soon realized he could write about everyday experiences. Like when his mom tried to get his younger brother to eat his food by comparing his plate with Barry's. "Look," she would say, "Barry ate all his vegetables, why can't you be that way?" That night he wrote, He Eats Asparagus, Why Can't You Be That Way? The rest, as they say, is history.

Barry has written songs for Sesame Street and The Weekly Reader and starred in a television show for children that won two Emmy awards. He performs his songs on two different Grammy Award-winning albums and sings his song All I Want is You in the opening credits of the Academy Award winning movie Juno.

He lives in Maryland with his wife, daughter, son, dog, and cat, but the kids are now grown up. When not writing or performing, he likes to ride along the bicycle trails near his house or kayak in the nearby Patuxent River. For more information visit www.barrylou.com.

Genre: Singer-Songwriter – Solo artist who writes and sings songs but gives listeners a different way to perceive things or a new angle on something familiar and features the instrument that the song was written on.
